Training and Co-operation Plans of the Youth in Action Programme

A vital contribution to European youth policy

Supporting young people's employability

Increasing participation in civil society and politics

Strengthening social cohesion

Increasing participation in civil society and politics

D Increasing participation in civil society and politics

A decreasing percentage of young people as part of the overall population in Europe, their wish to participate more in society and political life, a shift from long-term memberships in political parties and organisations to ad hoc movements and social networking, a very low participation in the elections to the European Parliament (and partly a low one in national and/or regional level too) – these are only some of the facts collected by the EU Youth Report which show the need to encourage more young people can be encouraged to participation and active citizenship. The topic is therefore high on the agenda of European youth policy: 'to encourage young people to be active citizens and participate in society and politics is one of the main objectives of the EU youth strategy'. This is encouraged through the Structured Dialogue projects and the Youth in Action Programme, with its permanent priorities on participation and European Citizenship, as well as different funding opportunities for participation projects where the political will becomes everyday practice on the European level. The Training and Co-operation Plan is used to support, train and connect the different actors from the local to the European level. It enables young people and youth workers to run youth democracy or youth initiative projects, to prepare young people and policy makers to engage in the Structured Dialogue and to support the exchange of young people, youth workers, policy makers and researchers about ways to increase participation in civil society and politics.

- Hundreds of youth workers and active young people have been trained on how to be actively involved in democratic and decision-making processes in their local community and how to create a Youth Democracy project through Action 1.3
- More than 500 coaches have been trained who support young people in implementing participatory projects

Increasing participation in civil society and politics

As the European level support for international youth work has grown, so the roles of National Agencies have increased in complexity and importance. In addition to administering funds, they are also expected to play more of a catalyst role in youth policy development within their countries. For a relatively new agency such as the Croatian one this could be a daunting task, but the staff committed themselves to the task and set up a strategy to inform and encourage many different stakeholders (both young people and policy makers) to explore and inspire structured dialogue initiatives, using the Long-term training course on the Structured Dialogue and Active Youth Participation as a central pillar. After introductory and capacity building elements in the first seminar, the participants from each of the regions in Croatia carried out local youth policy projects, the experience of which they were able to share in the second seminar. Follow-up surveys show that participants have identified their efforts to implement structured dialogue within different levels of the local community and are bringing the European dimension alive with financial assistance from the Programme

As the local level is crucial for the implementation and transfer into practice of youth policy, the Slovakian National Agency implemented the Partnership – Long-term Training for Municipalities. Mayors, members of local parliaments and employees of the municipalities came together for a series of meetings to learn how to develop and implement local youth policies. On the basis of comprehensive information about participation and youth policy on national and European level, and a thorough analysis of the situation and needs of their municipalities, each of them developed their own policy proposal, including public consultations with young people on the way. A study visit to Sweden allowed for some peer learning, which further inspired the Slovak participants for action and contributed to establish co-operation among some of the participating municipalities. Clearer youth policies and concrete action plans on local level, a considerably increased participation of young people in decisions concerning them and a series of promoting national and international partnerships and projects are the most relevant outcomes this activity led to.

Involving over 200 people from all over the country, Leverage the Irish National Agency brought innovative to youth participation in the Structured Dialogue about European Youth Policy in the Cross-Cross Youth Consultations project. As the project aimed to reach out to all young people and very diverse groups including young people from urban and rural areas, with fewer opportunities, from minority groups etc... a thorough preparation was vital to guarantee success. Having decided on and then explored one topic, and developed the necessary skills to run a consultation project, the participants went back to their local community and ran projects constructing concrete policy recommendations to the national authorities and the European Commission.

This training programme inspired me to get active, also on national level when it comes to developing strategies for youth and improving active youth participation on both local, regional and state level. (Croatia, TCP activity)

NA Network Training Courses within the Youth in Action Programme

2.3 The SALTO-YOUTH Resource Centres³

The European Commission has created eight Resource Centres to support the work of the National Agencies and other structures and beneficiaries of the programme.

These Resource Centres are called SALTO-YOUTH⁴, and their role is to provide different kinds of resources and support to improve the quality of youth projects in priority areas.

The SALTO-YOUTH Resource Centres provide training courses, training tools, information about good practice, networks and partnerships development, partner-finding, etc. They work in close co-operation with the National Agencies to reach the users of the Youth in Action Programme.

The creation of the SALTO-YOUTH RCs dates from the year 2000 and evolved towards true Resource Centres on a specific priority or region. Currently, there are eight such centres, working on eight priorities.

⁴ SALTO-YOUTH stands for Support, Advanced Learning & Training Opportunities within the European Youth in Action Programme.

- The SALTO Cultural Diversity RC is based in the United Kingdom and focuses on promoting tolerance and diversity in Europe.
- The SALTO Inclusion RC is based in Belgium and promotes social inclusion, while striving for inclusion of all youth in the Youth in Action Programme.
- The SALTO Participation RC (formerly known as Youth Initiatives) is based in Belgium and is aimed at supporting the European dimension of Youth Initiatives and Youth Democracy Projects, the new Actions 1.2 and 1.3.
- The SALTO Euro-Med RC is based in France and works on co-operation in the field of youth in the Euro-Mediterranean basin.
- The SALTO South-East Europe RC is based in Slovenia and promotes the co-operation between the Programme Countries and the Neighbouring Partner Countries of South-East Europe in the field of youth.
- The SALTO Eastern Europe and Caucasus RC is based in Poland and supports the co-operation between the Programme Countries and the Neighbouring Partner Countries of Eastern Europe and Caucasus and thus bridges youth co-operation between Western and Eastern Europe.
- The SALTO Information RC is operated by the Swedish National Agency and the Hungarian National Agency and is aimed at facilitating the communication between SALTO-YOUTH RCs, National Agencies, and European Commission.

- The SALTO Training and Co-operation RC is based in Germany and is aimed at contributing to the development of a coherent European Training Strategy⁵ within the Youth in Action Programme.

Since 2000, the SALTO Training and Co-operation RC supports the quality development of the national Training and Co-operation Plans (TCPs) of the National Agencies, co-ordinates European-wide training offers, fosters the co-operation between the different stakeholders of the European Training Strategy, and disseminates results, tools, and good practice.

Within this context, the SALTO Training and Co-operation RC also organises the so-called NA Network Training Courses (TCA), training courses at European level for European youth workers, multipliers, and trainers, financed by the TCP budget of the NAs. To implement the different courses, SALTO co-operates closely with a pool of European trainers and with the network of National Agencies.

Since 2005, an additional aim of the SALTO Training and Co-operation RC is to develop and implement a special recognition instrument at European level for organisers of and participants in approved programme projects – Youthpass⁶. The three essential elements of the initiative are to support the employability of young people and youth workers, the reflection upon the personal non-formal learning process, and the social recognition of youth work in general.
